

09/31/64

ABSTRACT

A distributed database system includes a central station for accumulating and distributing data on a database, and a plurality of receiver stations that receive the data and selectively make available at least portions of the data in accordance with the demands of a user. A transmitter encodes and transmits the sequential data stream for delivery embedded within television signals.

607230-49797E60

Sub
a1